TITLE IX ATHLETICS CLASSES

BY REQUEST – ONLINE / IN-PERSON

ABOUT THE CLASSES

Participants in the Title IX Athletics Classes learn the Title IX intercollegiate athletics requirements during the classes. Participants receive a copy of our self-evaluation manual “Title IX and Intercollegiate Athletics: How It All Works – In Plain English” – a $265 value.

Class participants may bring athletics program documents to the class to analyze during the explanations of Title IX policy. By the end of the class, participants may have answers regarding their institution’s compliance for those Title IX athletics program components covered during the class.

Classes are scheduled upon request and provided online. Good Sports, Inc., does not host classes. In-person classes may be considered depending on location and requested dates.

WHO SHOULD PARTICIPATE

Designed for athletics administrators, class participants have included athletics administrators, Title IX coordinators, general counsels, university vice presidents, coaches, athletics trainers, and human resources staff.

SCHEDULING A CLASS

Conferences, individual institutions, and individuals may schedule their own class. A minimum number of three participants is requested. Suggested agendas and pricing are below. Class topics and pricing may be modified based on specific requests.

The half--day class addresses the most important Title IX athletics requirement with which to comply: the three-part test (under the accommodation of interests and abilities), while the one-day class addresses the two most important Title IX athletics requirements with which to comply: the three-part test and athletic scholarships. Noncompliance with either issue may be viewed as a violation of federal civil rights law. The class includes a review of the Title IX policy documents and civil rights compliance approaches under the Title IX athletics provisions (de-mystifying Title IX).

The two-day class addresses the five major program components under the Title IX athletics provisions. These issues involve significant benefits for student-athletes. Compliance problems in these areas are common and often more significant because of the importance of the benefits. The class also includes a session for demystifying Title IX. The three-day class covers all Title IX athletics issues.
